Practice does not make perfect.

Practice with appropriate feedback leads to improvement.

how to enhance student experience and engagement

AROUSE CURIOSITY

CREATE OPPORTUNITIES FOR PRACTICE

PROVIDE APPROPRIATE FEEDBACK

So,

Discuss the kinds of feedback you will provide and how to use it.

Seek student input regarding the kind of feedback they value.

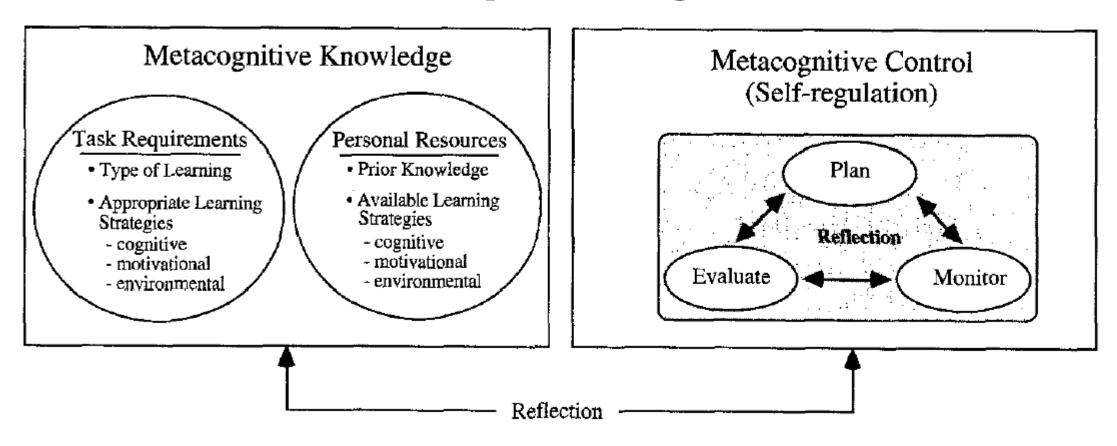

Emphasize the importance of acting on feedback—strongest approach would be to allow/encourage revision.

Provide clear information on standards (rubric).

Build in peer feedback system (PeerScholar, Joordens)

Explain learning strategies for your area.

Expert Learning

Ertmer, P. A., & Newby, T. J. (1996). The expert learner: Strategic, self-regulated, and reflective. Instructional science, 24(1), 1-24.

Great irony

- 1. To differentiate Ontario Tech University in the face of this crisis, we need to genuinely accept that better learning outcomes depend on students being more engaged and self-regulated, and
- 2. To attain that end will require that faculty re-design classes in ways that foster and support active learning.

Resolving this irony not only involves disruption of the notion that teaching is synonymous with telling, it also involves modelling the kind of self-regulated inquiry that characterizes expert learners.

- The College Quarterly invited me to write about teaching for engagement a few years ago. The following pieces are meant to provide practical advice for postsecondary instructors.

Lastly, we are blessed with a superb instructional support team at the Teaching and Learning Centre that are only too eager to help faculty teach for engagement.
