2020 to 2021

Tips for Time Management

Things to remember:

- You will have multiple courses, which means juggling multiple assignments and exams.
- Attend your classes. A single class can be thought of as costing approximately $20 or higher, depending on your program and the type of class, so skipping is a waste of your money.
- The two-hour rule: For every one hour you spend in class, you should spend approximately two hours studying for that class (studying includes reading, reviewing, assignment completion, paper writing, research, group work, etc.).
- Evidence shows that reviewing class notes right after you have been taught the material is the most effective way to remember information long-term. The longer you wait to review, the less you will remember, and it becomes less of a review and more of a re-learning.
- When working on assignments, you should spend 30 minutes to 1 hour for every 1 per cent that the activity is worth. For example, if a paper is 10 per cent of your grade, you should spend a suggested 5 to 10 hours working on it. This estimation helps put the level of importance of activities into perspective.
- Prioritize your time. Your health and education come before anything else.
- Find a support system. There is nothing like family and friends to help you push through difficult times.

To get and stay organized:

- Use a 4-month calendar to see the whole semester and all due dates and tests at a glance.
- Colour code your planner and calendars.
- At the beginning of each week, set aside some time to plan for all of the academic tasks you need to do.
- When making your schedule, add in all other commitments, not just school.
- Schedule study time. Studying is easy to put off because it does not have a due date, but it is one of the most important jobs a student has.
- Schedule study time based on your energy cycle so you get the most out of your concentration capacities. Schedule more difficult tasks during your high energy time and leave easier work for your low energy time.
- It is a good idea to read through lecture material before your class so you know the general topics of the lecture (if your teacher posts the lecture beforehand). This gives you a head start so that you will better understand keywords and concepts.
- Break down large assignments into more manageable tasks that you can work on over a period of time.
- Estimate the time each activity will take (University of Toronto Assignment Calculator: ctl.utsc.utoronto.ca/assignmentcal).
- Give yourself time to get some exercise on a daily basis for both your physical and mental health.
- Get enough sleep. Your brain will thank you.
- Take breaks. Overloading on information affects retention.
- Checklists are a great way to make sure that you don't miss anything.
- Use the time between classes to work on assignments and study.
